TX-40 RELOADER MAKES LESS LETHAL TRAINING AFFORDABLE

MONTCLAIR, CA — July 30, 2008 — Ten-X Ammunition, Inc. has released the TX-40 reloading system for reloading 40mm less lethal sponge/foam rounds. Ten-X Ammunition's experience in manufacturing blank ammunition provided the perfect background to create a propelling charge that allows law enforcement agencies to cost effectively reload their used 40mm shells for training and replicate duty round performance.

“Less lethal systems are extremely important today in terms of officer safety and risk management. The biggest problem nationwide is insufficient officer training,” said Richard Pumerantz, President of Ten-X Ammunition, Inc.. “With the cost of new rounds exceeding $25 per shot, many departments limit officer training to firing only two rounds per year. Our TX-40 reloading system gives law enforcement agencies a cost effective and simple solution to increase training on 40mm launchers at a cost of $1 per round.”

“Using the TX-40 has generated departmental savings, and helped with the decision to purchase six more 40mm launchers,” explained Sgt. Mike Leinen, Range Officer for Huntington Park Police Department. “We have been using 40mm launchers for many years, but it was impossible to reload the casings reliably and the costs of new rounds was excessive. The TX-40 reloader made it simple to reload dozens of 40mm foam training rounds in minutes. The savings generated in just one department training session pays for a new launcher. Best of all, our officers get to fire rounds down range and become very familiar and extremely comfortable with the 40mm launcher. The propelling charge created by Ten-X is a match to the factory loads.”

The TX-40 is a simple to use reloading press with customized attachments: a shell plate holder; an interchangeable propelling charge extraction tool, and insertion tools. The Ten-X 40mm reloading system uses specially designed 38 caliber smokeless propelling charges with burst disks and are packaged 250 rounds per box.

“We believe the TX-40 reloader will provide officers with much needed training and also provide departments with the budgetary savings that will make 40mm launchers law enforcement’s less lethal weapon of choice,” said Pumerantz. “This is exactly what departments have needed, and officers and civilians will be safer because of it.”
